17 Defendant.)
18 _____)

I, Mary K. Braza, hereby state and declare as follows:

1. I am a partner at the law firm of Foley & Lardner LLP. I am one of the attorneys representing defendant MLB Advanced Media, L.P., in this action, and I am admitted pro hac vice in this action. I am competent to testify, and this declaration is based upon my personal knowledge.

2. From time to time since the filing of this lawsuit, including during the past few weeks, the parties have engaged in settlement discussions. In late July, RealNetworks' counsel, Ralph Palumbo, raised with me the question of settlement in light of upcoming discovery obligations, which would incur great expense for both parties. Over the past few weeks, the

1 parties have discussed and exchanged settlement proposals, including on August 13, 2004, and
2 August 17, 2004.

3 MLBAM suggested in early August that the parties jointly approach the Court for
4 an extension of the September 1, 2004, discovery deadline, in order to afford the parties
5 additional opportunity for meaningful exploration of settlement. In a telephone message
6 August 3, 2004, counsel for RealNetworks refused to agree to jointly approach the Court, despite
7 a professed willingness to pursue settlement. RealNetworks has maintained that position since 8 then.

9 3. Jurisdictional defects with respect to the plaintiff's diversity claims were raised
10 through a denial of certain alleged facts in defendant's answer, dated March 29, 2004, and
11 specifically in the Joint Status Report to the Court. In addition, I discussed these jurisdictional
12 issues with RealNetworks' counsel Denise Ashbaugh by telephone on the afternoon of July 2, 13 2004.

4 from Denise L. Ashbaugh, Summit Law Group PLLC attorney for RealNetworks, to Mary K.

6 Tim Wan, an employee of RealNetworks.

8 12. On August 17, 2004, by letter and by email communication, MLBAM alerted
9 RealNetworks that MLBAM planned to file its Motion to Dismiss on August 19, 2004. At that
10 time, MLBAM asked RealNetworks to stipulate to a dismissal of all of MLBAM's counterclaims
11 without prejudice. RealNetworks, through a letter from its counsel, indicated that it would
12 respond to that request by August 19 or 20, 2004. MLBAM, by letter from its counsel, again
13 requested a response by August 19, 2004. As of the time of this filing, RealNetworks has not
14 responded to MLBAM's request that it stipulate to the dismissal of counterclaims.

15 13. Attached as Exhibit I is a true and correct copy of a letter of March 24, 2004, from
16 MLBAM to RealNetworks, regarding issues identified by MLBAM relating to RealNetworks'
17 conduct and requesting that RealNetworks take corrective action.

18 14. Attached as Exhibit J is a true and correct copy of a letter of April 16, 2004, from 19 RealNetworks to MLBAM responding to the letter attached as Exhibit I.

20 15. I hereby certify that defendant MLB Advanced Media, L.P., has in good faith
21 conferred with plaintiff on the following issues: Obtaining a stay of discovery; obtaining a
22 stipulation of dismissal of MLBAM's counterclaims; and obtaining a stipulation of dismissal of 23 all claims in this lawsuit.

24 25
26 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws for the State of Washington and for the United States that the foregoing is true and correct.

Re: RealNetworks v. MLBAM

Dear Bill:

The lawsuit RealNetworks recently filed against MLBAM has motivated us to scrutinize our relationship – past and present – more carefully than ever. An initial reexamination of that relationship has revealed several issues that require your immediate attention and response:

1. Real.com Misleading Advertisement and SuperPass Subscriber Confusion

A review of the Real.com Website revealed an advertisement for the Real One SuperPass service that is misleading and in violation of federal and state law. A copy is enclosed, and the relevant part is extracted here as follows:

MLB Advanced Media, L.P.
75 Ninth Avenue • New York, NY 10011

EXHIBIT

I

Bloomberg No. 5118

Having been your partner for over three years, we well know the thought and care that Real takes in preparing and publishing its advertisements for its services. We are therefore troubled by Real's attempt through this advertisement, which has the propensity to mislead, confuse and deceive purchasers into believing that Major League Baseball content remains available to SuperPass subscribers. Indeed, it seems that this advertisement is likely to have the effect of inducing consumers to purchase the service under a false pretense. This is a serious matter, one that has undoubtedly injured MLBAM as well as SuperPass subscribers.

We are also concerned that Real has made no effort to notify existing Real SuperPass subscribers that MLB content is currently not available through that service. As a result, it is likely that those subscribers do not know that their monthly subscription fee no longer affords them the right to view or listen to live or archived MLB Games.

That your failure to advise your subscribers of this change in service is likely to have adversely effected them is highlighted by two facts. First, as you are well aware, from the outset of our contractual relationship in 2001, you informed on-going and potential customers that MLB content was available through Real subscription products. Second, it is clear that you view the termination of content provider relationships as something you need to tell your investors – presumably because you believe that a change of content is likely to affect the number of persons who are willing to buy Real's service.¹ We believe that you have the same obligation to inform the consuming public -- particularly those who have agreed that Real may automatically charge the subscription fee to their credit cards each month -- that Real has terminated its relationship with a major content provider.

We believe that as a result of Real's conduct, it is likely consumers have been confused and deceived about their ability to access MLB content through Real's subscription service. In order to put a halt to any further consumer confusion and deception from occurring, we request that you immediately do the following:

- Remove from your sites, and discontinue all use of, the advertisement referenced above, as well as any other false, misleading, deceptive or confusing advertising or promotional message about Real's services that includes a reference (verbal or graphic) to Major League Baseball.
- Send a remedial message to each SuperPass subscriber informing each that Major League Baseball content has not been available through SuperPass since December 31, 2003. This notice should clearly state that subscribers will no longer have the ability to access any MLB games in either audio or video format through the

¹ In Real's Form 8-K filed on January 29, 2004, Real disclosed as follows: "The second potential event relates to the possible cost of restructuring RealNetworks' relationship with a content provider whose content as of the first quarter is not being used in RealNetworks' primary video subscription services."

SuperPass subscription. Consistent with our February 8, 2004 "summary of terms" (as Mr. Jacobson described it), we must approve the notice prior to its distribution.

- To the extent you continue to advertise the availability of any baseball-related sports content through the Real SuperPass, place a clearly worded notice on your site that Real has no affiliation with Major League Baseball and has no right to distribute MLB games or other content. Again, consistent with the summary of terms, we must approve the notice.
- Agree to a joint press release that explains to the public the limited nature of our 2004-05 agreement and makes clear that Real has no rights to collect, encode or distribute MLB games or other content.

2. Japan.real.com False Advertisement

Real's guide to its Japanese site also until recently contained a false advertisement. As the enclosed March 11, 2004 screenshot demonstrates, Real made unauthorized use of MLB logos and trademarks. Real's site also falsely states (according to our translation): "You can subscribe to watch the streaming of MLB Games (pay service). Enjoy the essence/true meaning of baseball. (This product's contents are in the English language.)" As RealNetworks is well aware, it is not authorized to sell subscriptions to MLB games in Japan or elsewhere. This false advertisement not only confuses consumers about the extent of Real's existing rights to Major League Baseball content, but it also tortiously interferes with MLBAM's current and future content distribution agreements in Japan and elsewhere. We are currently evaluating whether this false advertising also violates Japanese law.

In order to halt any further consumer confusion and deception from occurring, we request that you immediately remove the advertisement from japan.real.com (and from any other website on which it occurs), and remove any other false, misleading, deceptive or confusing advertising or promotional message about Real's services in Japan that includes a reference (verbal or graphic) to Major League Baseball.

Further, to the extent you continue to advertise the availability of any baseball-related sports content through japan.real.com we request that you place a clear notice on your site explaining that Real has no affiliation with Major League Baseball and has no right to distribute MLB games or other content. (Again, that notice is subject to our approval.)

We understand that japan.real.com sold a subscription product that included MLB content in the past. In light of this fact, we also believe it is in the public interest for Real to send a remedial message to each japan.real.com subscriber informing each that Major League Baseball content has not been available through Real's subscription service since December 31, 2003. This notice, subject to our approval, should clearly state that subscribers will no longer have the ability to access any MLB games in either audio or video format through the Real subscription product.

3. Indemnification for Acacia Claims

Again, so that we can achieve a full and final reconciliation of issues, we will need your definitive answer with respect to our October 3, 2003 letter demanding indemnification for allegations made against MLBAM by Acacia Technologies. Most recently, you said that the claims "may" be subject to indemnification in the Joint Defense Agreement we discussed.

As you are aware, we have continued to receive additional communications from Acacia. We have provided these communications to you, but have not provided a response. In the latest communications, Acacia's counsel has asked to meet with us during the period March 22 – 25, 2004 to discuss their patent infringement claims against MLBAM. So through this letter we ask for your definitive position with respect to this matter. Also, please let us know how we should respond to the repeated inquiries from Acacia. If we do not hear back from you, we intend to hire counsel to represent us in connection with Acacia's claims and to meet with Acacia and its attorneys, without prejudice to our rights as indemnitee. We will require Real to reimburse us for our counsel's services in dealing with this matter.

4. Digital Download Service

Also, we have an issue with respect to digital download services that you provided to MLBAM and its customers. Simply put, we jointly marketed the individual sale of MLB archived games by which the customer would have the ability to complete a digital download of an entire MLB game for the fee of $3.95. We marketed this service through our site, on the express understanding that Real would provide the technology to enable the customer to download the game. We sold approximately twenty-two thousand one hundred and ninety-six (22,196) such downloads and split the fees we collected with you. Some existing customers have never completed the digital download of the game even though they paid for the right to do so.

We need to know whether you will continue to support the digital download products that were sold and paid for under the March 21, 2001 agreement. If you will not agree to do so, we believe it is necessary to notify our customers that our technical service provider is no longer willing to provide this service and that MLBAM will give those customers who have not yet downloaded the games a refund. We will, of course, expect you to return amounts you received for downloads that Real never delivered. We also request that you provide an immediate answer to this item so that, if necessary, we may promptly begin the notification and refund process.

5. Real Player and Real Advertising During MLB Games

Pursuant to the February 8, 2004 summary of terms, RealNetworks has no rights to distribute content. Likewise, RealNetworks has no rights to promote or advertise Real or its products or services in connection with MLB games (with the exception of the free weekly audio game, which we agreed could be broadcast in the 3 pane RealPlayer experience provided the advertising is not overly aggressive.) Therefore, we are requesting that you assure us that no advertising or promotion streaming of Real products or services or those of third parties will take place during the broadcasting of 2004 season MLB games whether in audio or video, regardless of whether the content is live or archived. We note that the RealPlayer currently distributes advertisements of Real products and services during archived and live MLB games that are being streamed from MLB.com. We object and request that you immediately cease this practice.

This letter reserves all rights MLBAM has with respect to Real Networks, including, but not limited to, rights to inspect and audit Real's records pursuant to Section 9.4 of the March 21, 2001 agreement.

Because a number of issues require immediate action on the part of MLBAM, we request a response to this letter no later than Friday, March 26, 2004. Thank you, and we look forward to hearing from you.

Very truly yours,

Michael J. Mellis

Re: RealNetworks, Inc. v. MLB Advanced Media, L.P.

Dear Mike:

This letter responds to the issues raised in your letter of March 24, 2004 and your emails concerning the free game of the week that MLBAM is obligated to present exclusively in the RealMedia format. To the extent that issues raised in your March 24 letter also form the basis of MLBAM's counterclaims in the current litigation between Real and MLBAM, this letter states our position with respect to the merits of your counterclaims.

1. Allegedly Misleading Advertisements on Real.com.

Your letter alleges that Real's use on its web page of a "generic" picture of people playing baseball is likely to confuse consumers that Real provides access to MLB games as part of its subscription products or is otherwise affiliated with MLB. We disagree. Our web pages and order paths provide consumers with clear and unambiguous descriptions of all content that is available as part of Real's subscription packages. None of those pages mentions MLB games as being included in any package, nor do they use any MLB trademark or logo. No consumer considering a subscription to Real's premium services could reasonably believe that MLB games are included in any Real subscription package.

Moreover, while our subscription products do not include MLB games, they do include access to college baseball games, as well as general sports content that includes news coverage of baseball, including MLB (e.g., Sports Illustrated, CNN, ABC News). Thus, the use of a "generic" baseball picture that does not contain any

MLB logos, identify any MLB players, or depict any MLB location is proper and not deceptive.

MLBAM also alleges that the existence of an advertisement for post-season MLB games on Real's Japanese website was "unauthorized", amounted to unfair competition, and has harmed MLBAM. The advertisement to which you refer was not unauthorized—it was placed on the website at MLBAM's request last Fall to promote the post-season. Consumers who clicked on the advertisement were sent to an MLB.com web page, where they were given the opportunity to purchase MLBAM products from MLBAM. Although Real concedes that this advertisement inadvertently remained on our Japanese website for a few weeks after the original contract expired, MLBAM was not harmed. If anything, the result was free promotion of MLBAM's products. Real removed the advertisement on its own initiative on March 16, 2004, before receiving your letter of March 24.

2. Alleged "advertisements" in the RealPlayer during playback of MLB games.

MLBAM's counterclaim alleges that RealNetworks engages in "unauthorized advertising" by serving "pop-up ads" to subscribers who access audio or video webcasts of MLB games made available by MLBAM. This allegation is false. RealNetworks does not and cannot control what ads may or may not be served in its consumer software during the presentation of content by MLBAM or any other third party. To the extent that this allegation refers to messages sent by Real to its software customers via the RealPlayer Message Center, MLBAM's characterization of such messages as "advertisements" is inaccurate. The RealPlayer Message Center is a service that allows RealPlayer users to select customized informational messages on topics such as news, weather, entertainment, and music. The messages must be specifically requested by the end user and can be turned off by the end user at any time. They are not "advertisements".

MLBAM's claim that Real is violating MLBAM's rights by "exposing" subscribers of MLB products to "advertisements for RealNetworks' subscription products, such as Real Rhapsody" in the RealPlayer is equally misleading. The "advertisement" of which MLBAM complains appears in the RealPlayer only if a consumer takes affirmative action to enable a feature on the RealPlayer that finds and displays album information for music tracks that the user is listening to in the RealPlayer. The default setting for this feature is to show information only when such information is available. If a user changes the default setting to leave the feature on at all times, even when there is no specific album information to provide for whatever is being played, then the user may receive other music information, such as an invitation to try the RealRhapsody music service. We note also that since MLBAM serves games within an embedded player window, a consumer would also have to take the affirmative step of changing the presentation format of the display so that the game appears in the full

RealPlayer, rather than as an embedded player window. In other words, a consumer has to take several actions to override the default presentation of MLB games in the RealPlayer in order to achieve the presentation reflected in the screenshot attached to MLBAM's counterclaims, and indeed the consumer has to be a reasonably sophisticated user of the RealPlayer in order to know how to do so. Clearly, no such consumer would be "confused" as to whether MLB sponsored or approved the information contained in messages delivered via other features of the RealPlayer software.

MLBAM's allegations that Real is engaging in false advertising and unfair competition on its website and through "player advertising" are frivolous. We therefore request that MLBAM confirm that it will dismiss its counterclaims, with prejudice.

3. Indemnification for Acacia Claims.

RealNetworks will fulfill its indemnity obligations under the March 2001 agreement between RealNetworks and MLBAM. In the event that Acacia asserts a patent infringement claim against MLBAM, and to the extent that such claim is based on the RN Services or the System (as defined in the March 2001 agreement), RealNetworks will defend and indemnify MLBAM as set forth in the March 2001 agreement. To the extent that claims asserted by Acacia are in part included in Real's indemnity obligations and in part outside of Real's indemnity obligations such that the claim must be defended by MLBAM, Real is willing to cooperate with MLBAM in the defense of Acacia's claims.

MLBAM has not responded to the draft Joint Defense Agreement we sent on February 18. We request that MLBAM execute the Joint Defense Agreement so that RealNetworks and MLBAM can more freely discuss the complex issues surrounding Acacia's patents, the RN Services, and MLBAM's activities.

4. Digital Download Service.

We believe it is highly unlikely that any consumer who purchased a downloaded game from MLB.com during last year's season, but failed to complete the download at that time, will now wish to return and complete the download during the 2004 MLB season. Nevertheless, we confirm that, for the balance of the 2004 MLB season, we will continue to support the digital download service for all customers who purchased a game during the 2003 MLB season but never completed the digital download of the game. Please advise us how long MLBAM requests that such customers be allowed to return and receive access to any such game.

5. Free Game of the Week.

Your email of April 5, 2004 argues that because the February 2004 agreement does not specifically mention promotion of the free game of the week, the parties could not agree how to promote them. MLBAM has taken the position that MBLAM has no obligation to promote the free game of the week, and Real has no right to promote those games. MLBAM's stated intention to prohibit Real from promoting the free games harms both Real and MLBAM, and is contrary to the clear intentions for including this provision in the February 2004 agreement.

RealNetworks bargained for the free game of the week to be provided exclusively in Real's format in order to promote the use of Real's technology to a wider audience. An attempt by MLBAM to prohibit Real from informing consumers that the free game of the week is offered in Real's format would deprive Real of the benefits of having the free game in the first place. Moreover, MLBAM must give Real reasonable notice of each week's free game (at least 7 days in advance) so that Real can reasonably promote the availability of the games in Real's format. MLBAM benefits from Real's promotion of the free game because that offers a vehicle to encourage a wider audience to purchase MLBAM's subscription products. In addition to giving Real reasonable notice so that it can promote the free games, MLBAM must promote the free game of the week on the MLB.com website in at least as prominent a manner as was done for this week's free game.

Accordingly, we request that MLBAM agree to (i) engage in good faith promotion of the game of the week on the MLB.com website (and on websites of the two team's playing in that week's free game); (ii) allow Real to promote the game of the week on the RealGuide, so that Real can drive traffic to the game; and (iii) offer free games for all MLB teams over the course of the season in order to reach the broadest spectrum of interested fans.

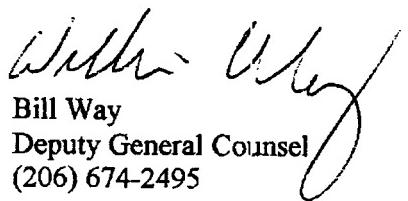

We don't understand the request in your letter for "access" to the three-pane experience. This is the default experience for encoding content in our formats, and is the format that your technical team has used for the last several years, so they should have no problem replicating it. If your technical team has any questions on this, please feel free to have them contact Matt Deichman.

Your concern about Real sending "advertisements" during the free games is also misplaced. As explained above, Real does not and cannot send advertisements during webcasts originating with a third party. Any information conveyed in other panes of the RealPlayer is essentially controlled by the end user, not Real.
